Fry bread was created by the Navajo Nation over 150 years ago and is made using simple pantry ingredients. The history of this traditional Indigenous bread is grounded in a challenging past but is now seen by some as a sign of the perseverance of Native peoples in the United States. Today, it is commonly made on reservations, at powwows, and in homes of Indigenous families across the US.

Come join us as we make frybread and learn about the history of how it came to be!
