

Kathleen Broglio, DNP, ANP-BC, ACHPN, CARN-AP, FPCN, FAANP, FAAHPM

Kathleen Broglio is an Associate Professor of Medicine at Geisel School of Medicine at Dartmouth College and Nurse Practitioner in Palliative Medicine, Dartmouth Hitchcock Medical Center. She has conducted studies on the prevalence of opioid risk in oncology; cannabis use in palliative medicine, implementation of opioid management guidelines in the palliative care setting; telehealth use, and interprofessional palliative care education. Kathleen's clinical care focused on complex pain and symptom management and treatment of substance use disorder in palliative care patients. She mentors colleagues, lectures and has published on the treatment of pain in the setting of risks for substance use disorder. Her experience includes acute and chronic pain management; and acute, ambulatory, and home-based palliative care.

She received her Bachelors in Economics from the University of Maryland, her Bachelor of Nursing from University of Hawaii, a Masters in Nursing from University of Washington, and a Doctorate in Nursing Practice from New York University. She completed a palliative care fellowship at Beth Israel Medical Center, New York.